Pay attention: Does persistent ADHD lead to gambling problems in young adults?

Marshall, E. (2009).

A number of studies (Carlton & Manowitz, 1992; Carlton et al., 1987; Rugle & Melamed, 1993) have shown an association between symptoms of Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD) in childhood and pathological gambling behavior during adulthood. The majority of these studies have retrospective designs, and examine past ADHD symptoms after the development of pathological gambling behavior. These study designs are susceptible to considerable recall bias and leave the causal relationship between ADHD and problem gambling unclear. This week's WAGER reviews a prospective study (Breyer et al., 2009), which attempts to illuminate the relationship between persistent ADHD and gambling behaviors from childhood through young adulthood.

Call for Papers, Grant Proposals, RFPs, and Nominations

Call for Papers: National Association for Gambling Studies 19th Annual Conference

Prospective presenters are invited to submit proposals to present at the 19th Annual National Association for Gambling Studies Conference. The conferences attract and welcome national and international presentations from the full spectrum of speakers, ranging from internationally renowned experts to students giving their first academic presentation. The aim of the conference is to be an international forum for discussion on all areas of gambling research.

Deadline for submissions is July 31st, 2009.
